To confirm, Joe is sending you by overnight mail today a new load file with all of the metadata required by the Court Order. I request that you confirm that you will send the new load file to us by overnight mail for Saturday delivery. As I understand, Jenni Loomis' documents will not be among the load file materials.

You have mischaracterized my position regarding document production. As I indicated on the phone before you hung up on me, it is not appropriate for you to allow your client, Joe Loomis, to run the entire document production without any assistance from you, his counsel. I did not suggest that clients should not be involved; I suggested that you should be and that your failure to be involved has caused the problems we are dealing with today.

Michelle, Joe has sent to us by overnight mail the revised load file, etc. that you requested. This is a rolling production, as you know, and your documents certainly have not arrived on the dates they were due either.

Your position that clients should not assist with document production is not novel to us. We have heard that argued before judges in Arizona. Typically, the lawyers who make that argument are sanctioned for not involving their clients in document production.
